

Collaborative Forest Management – What does it mean and what does it look like?

Organizer: Theresa Davidson, Mark Twain National Forest, USFS; tmdavidson@fs.fed.us

Abstract: The management of public lands is best accomplished when those activities are planned in collaboration with an interdisciplinary team and the users of those public lands. Engaging stakeholders and those with a diversity of interests can reduce the threat of objections and litigation and can lead to public support of land management activities. This workshop will highlight examples of collaborative forest management in Missouri.